U.S. Fulbright screening committee recommended these students for awards, but their grants aren't final until the Fulbright committees in the host countries give approval.

Fulbright grants are funded under the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961, through an annual appropriation made by Congress to the U.S. Information Agency, and by foreign governments, universities, corporations and private donors. The grants are available for study and research.

The J. Williams Fulbright Foreign Scholarship Board, composed of 12 educational and public leaders appointed by the U.S. president, establishes criteria for the selection of candidates and has final authority for awarding grants.

Full grants provide round-trip international travel, maintenance for the tenure of the award, a research allowance and, if applicable, tuition waivers. All applicants are required to have sufficient proficiency in the language of the host country to carry out their proposed study or research. In addition, applicants must be U.S. citizens and hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the beginning of the grant.
